National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment
During Monday afternoon and evening snow showers are expected to merge to bring longer periods of snow across eastern Scotland and parts of northeast England. The snow will continue through Monday night and much of Tuesday, especially in more eastern areas where 5 to 10cm is widely expected to build up. Snow accumulations in more western parts will generally be less than 5cm. Drifting snow will occur, especially over upland areas in gale force East winds. Icy stretches will also develop, especially over upland areas, adding to the hazardous conditions.

Please see the issued amber warning which highlights the areas that are expected to see the heaviest snowfall and greatest probability of disruption to travel.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 12:00 on Mon, 18th Mar 2013 until 23:59 on Tue, 19th Mar 2013

During Monday afternoon and evening snow showers will merge to bring longer periods of snow across eastern Scotland and parts of northeast England with some significant accumulations likely in parts of the east especially. The snow will continue into Tuesday before slowly easing from the north during Tuesday afternoon and night.

The public should be aware of the possibility of disruption to travel.
